Entering his second year as a member of the New England Patriots, defensive end Trey Flowers will be a key cog in the Pats' defense. The 24-year-old from Fort Valley, Georgia, will be a focal point in new defensive coordinator

Matt Patricia's scheme and appears capable of assuming a larger role in the team's long-range plans. While highly regarded as a third-round pick out of Arkansas in 2016, the 6-foot-3, 252-pound Flowers has never posted a full 16-game season, toiling as an understudy to more experienced teammates over the past three years, racking up two sacks in 60 regular-season games. But the fourth-year NFL veteran has had a fine training camp for a player who has bulked up over the years and has bulked up more since Patricia arrived last month. "He's a young guy that has a lot of ability," Patricia said Monday at his first press conference since assuming the top defensive role. "He's a player that, in a certain scheme, can move forward, but he has to have the confidence and play fast, and he's going to have to be comfortable with our defense, comfortable with being coached."

Flowers has a chance to start for the Patriots, on the edge or in a nickel package as a pass-rusher, even if fellow edge defender

Trey Caldwell is a better player at the moment. Caldwell was listed as the starter ahead of Flowers last season after a strong preseason, but Flowers played more as a situational pass rusher and was effective. "It's going to be day by day," Caldwell said. "It's never going to be a 'this guy is going to start and that guy is going to start,'
